

The Tricurse is one of the Artifacts of the New Creation. It's similar to the Triforce, but it has a red inner triangle pointing downward through the bottom two triangles.

That geometry creates a stark visual contrast to the traditional Triforce!

By dropping an inverted red triangle through the bottom edge, the symbol shifts from a static, upward-pointing pyramid into a dynamic downward vector—visually pointing deep into the earth, perfectly aligning with the Hexagonal Well descending into the subterranean layers.

(Downward Vector) (Passing Through)

The Geometry of the Tricurse

1. The Structural Triangles:

- Two outer gold/light triangles sit at the base, with one apex triangle above—forming the classic triangular frame.

2. The Inverted Core (The Red Vector):

- Instead of an empty, hollow negative space in the center, a solid red triangle points downward.
- It extends through and past the lower boundary of the two base triangles, breaking the enclosed perimeter and driving downward like a blade, drill, or roots breaking through stone.

Lore & World Integration: Artifact of the New Creation

- Symbol of Inversion & Excavation: While traditional relics point toward the heavens or elevated skies, the Tricurse points downward into the unseen—the subterranean aquifers, the deep roots beneath the crops, and the Hexagonal Well.
- The Crimson Core: The red inner triangle represents the raw, thermal heat and subterranean energy (the root of the Firaga core in Farmeraga) that flows beneath the land, keeping the soil alive and powering the four cardinal regions.
- Connection to the Hexagonal Well: The six points of the combined geometry (the three outer triangle tips + the three points of the inverted red triangle) form the implicit outline of a Hexagon—the exact geometric blueprint used to construct the central Well!